of the deceased, and Justice Cox made a decree authorizing them to accept the offer. The eighth clause of the will directed that the historical collection be offered to the library of Congress, and if Congress should not purchase the collection be offered to the library of Congress, and if Congress should not purchase the collection in three years then to offer them undivided to any public library or body. Mr. Bancroft died January 17, 1891, and efforts were made to sell the same to Congress. A bill appropriating $75,000 passed the Senate, but it failed to become a law. This offer being acceptable, and as it will enable them to deliver possession of the dwelling and thus secure the purchase money, $100,000, they ask the authority.
